Many real estate lawyers are not aware of the EPA's new focus on enforcing its stormwater standards against clients who own, develop and build on real property. Stacy Stotts has significant experience in this area and will tell real estate lawyers what they need to be conscious of in order to effectively protect those clients. She will explain that the EPA is devoting significant resources into the enforcement of these standards with a strong focus on the construction sector. Ms. Stotts will discuss the wide-spread non-compliance that exists for many properties and construction sites and the most common violations. She will also offer insights about how the EPA selects sites to inspect and potentially enforce against. She will also provide detail about potential penalties, enforcement mechanisms and specific work requirements. She will offer advice about permits and storm water pollution prevention plans.
