Most clients never think about the tax consequences of a win or a settlement. For their lawyers who do, analysis of whether a recovery is taxable has become more complicated through Congress's and the U.S. Supreme Court's continual tinkering with tax laws. Sometimes recovering more for a client can result in less, as this presentation will detail by analyzing the steps for determining when a recovery is taxable. It should also help practitioners spot potential problems that may require planning to maximize the recoveries they achieve for their clients.
